PART 1 INTRODUCTION TO THE PATHWAY

1. Introduction to the pathway

There are high levels of mental health problems among the prison population. These may range from emotional distress, low mood and/or anxiety, perhaps in reaction to the experience of imprisonment, to more severe mental health problems such as bipolar disorder or schizophrenia. The proportions experiencing difficulties may be even higher among some groups of people, women, for example, or young offenders or people who are refugees or asylum seekers. Some prisoners may enter prison with a history of mental health problems others may become unwell during their time in custody.

Much is already being done within Scottish prisons to identify and respond to the mental health needs of the population, including Act2Care the SPS suicide risk management strategy, policies to promote positive mental health (SPS, 2002a; SPS, 2002b), Mental Health First Aid training for staff and the developing role of Multi-Disciplinary Mental Health Teams (MDMHTs) in the majority of prisons. Nonetheless there is scope for improving the processes for ensuring people receive timely and appropriate treatment and care to support their recovery.

To support further service improvement, the 'Taking Steps' pathway describes the processes and structures that need to be in place to identify and respond to the needs of prisoners experiencing emotional distress or mental health problems. As a recent WHO paper suggests, this is not just about prison healthcare but also about good prison management (WHO, 2008).

2. The principles underpinning the design and implementation of the pathway

A number of core principles underpin the development and design of the pathway.

The ten core principles enshrined within the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 should inform all actions to support people who have had or are currently experiencing a 'mental disorder' including people in prison. These are set out in box 1.1 below (more details on each principle are set out in appendix 1).
Box 1.1. The 10 principles underpinning the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) 2003 Act

1. Non-discrimination
2. Equality
3. Respect for diversity
4. Reciprocity
5. Informal care
6. Participation
7. Respect for carers
8. Least restrictive alternative
9. Benefit
10. Child welfare

To reinforce these in a prison context the pathway has been further informed by principles drawn from United Nations Conventions (see Coyle, 2007), the WHO Declaration on Prison Health (2003), European Prison Rules (see Coyle, 2007) and the SPS's own mission statement (http://www.sps.gov.uk). An additional principle reflects the increasing emphasis in mental health policy and practice on promoting individual recovery (see for example the review of mental health nursing (Scottish Executive, 2006c) and the Scottish Integrated Care Standards for Mental Health (NHS QIS, 2007)). These additional principles are summarised in box 1.2 below.

Box 1.2 Additional principles underpinning the pathway

Right to health care
Equivalent care
Patients not prisoners
Mental health promoting environment
Integrated within the prison and with external partners
Inclusive
Recovery orientated

3. What is the pathway and who is it for?

The pathway is based on the assumption that ALL prisoners will be experiencing some level of emotional distress, low mood and/or feelings of anxiety. However some people may require additional care and treatment due to the nature or severity of the mental health problems they experience. The aim of the pathway is to ensure that processes are in place to assess and identify changes in the level of individual need and to provide an appropriate and timely level of response. These levels of need can be broadly distinguished between:

Prisoners experiencing mild to moderate mental health problems

This would be a level of need that was manageable within the prison environment by primary health care staff, including GPs, and with input from residential and other staff who work with the prisoner to support them to maintain a therapeutic regime.

Prisoners experiencing moderate to severe mental health problems

This would be a level of need that was manageable within the prison environment by the prison Multi-Disciplinary Mental Health Team (or local equivalent), with support from primary health care staff, including GPs, and with input from residential and other staff who work with the prisoner to support them to maintain a therapeutic regime. This might include, for example, people with more severe levels of depression, or a mental health problem such as schizophrenia which the prisoner had experienced for some time and which was manageable with on-going monitoring.

Prisoners experiencing severe mental health problems or a mental health crisis not manageable within the prison

This level of need would need to be managed by the prison Multi-Disciplinary Mental Health Team (or local equivalent) and may necessitate transfer to NHS in-patient care under the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003.

The terms 'mild', 'moderate' and 'severe' while often used specifically in relation to depression, are used here in a more general sense to encompass the level of need, complexity (including, for example, people with a personality disorder and a mental health problem, or who are experiencing emotional distress and have a substance misuse problem), and severity of emotional distress or mental health problems experienced by a prisoner, irrespective of whether or not they have a mental health diagnosis or the type of mental health problem experienced.
Building on existing policies, standards and practices already implemented across the prison service, the pathway sets out a stepped approach for assessing and responding to these different levels\(^1\). The aim is to help each prison, working with their external partners, to develop clear, consistent processes to ensure early identification, assessment, care planning, treatment, care and throughcare for all prisoners experiencing emotional distress or mental health problems.

The pathway also helps to support planning and commissioning of prison mental health services. Monitoring and recording the actual process of care and comparing this with the locally agreed pathway helps to further improve the quality of service delivery. It can be used to identify where things are working well and can be built upon or where they are not working well and require further development or change.

\(^1\) For more information on stepped approaches, particularly in relation to anxiety and depression see NICE guideline 23 Depression (amended) (NICE, 2007).
Although described as a 'pathway', it is not necessarily linear: people may move back and forward depending on their level of need. People may be transferred to other prisons because of, or for reasons unrelated to their level of need (for example a remand prisoner who is convicted and sentenced). Step 7, pre-release planning, however, should be considered for all prisoners experiencing emotional distress or mental health problems. Figure 1 below illustrates the links and connections between each of the steps.

The pathway describes the different steps and responses to each level of need, the objectives of each stage, the action required and the key personnel who need to be involved. Everyone, however, who works with prisoners has a role to play in putting the pathway into practice - not just health care staff and staff of the prison multi-disciplinary mental health teams (MDMHTs), but prison managers, prison officers, escort staff, education centre staff, addictions teams, social work and social care staff.

Obviously prisons in Scotland vary in size, prisoner characteristics and healthcare resources. The pathway therefore sets out the core elements but enables each prison to develop and apply the pathway in ways that reflect the local context.

The focus of the pathway is on the point at which the prisoner enters or is in prison, throughcare and pre-release planning. It does not, at this time, include the earlier stages of police custody or pre-trial.

4. Supporting implementation

To assist local prisons to implement the pathway two documents have been developed. These are available via the SPS website and SPS Health & Care Directorate Sharepoint Library.

1. This 'Workbook' is designed to assist each prison to plan, develop and implement the pathway so that it reflects and is integrated into local policies and practices. Planning and development should involve key managers and staff within each prison together with relevant external partners.

For each of the steps the different elements or activities which make up the step are described. For each element or action the range of people who should be involved is indicated together with the key objectives of the element or activity and issues to consider when looking at the ways for delivering each element locally.

2. A User Guide sets out the policy context, purpose and structure of the pathway. This is aimed at all those with a contribution to make to the implementation of the pathway. As suggested above, this includes not just healthcare teams and their external partners, but also prison officers and others working with prisoners, including professionals from outwith the prison involved in throughcare and pre-release planning.

PART 2 TAKING STEPS: THE PATHWAY TO SUPPORT PRISONERS EXPERIENCING EMOTIONAL DISTRESS OR MENTAL HEALTH PROBLEMS

The sections below set out:

- The different elements of each step - that is the processes, practices or actions that need to be taken
- Who should be involved in each element
- The key points or objectives behind each element
- Questions for service commissioners and providers to consider in relation to each element.

This is the framework or template that each prison, working with their partners, can use to assess, develop and monitor their current processes and practices. As noted earlier, many of the 'elements' are already part of SPS policy - whether in the Health Care standards (SPS, 2006), or in Positive Mental Health (SPS, 2002a) or The Health Promoting Prison (SPS, 2002b) or as current practice under Act2Care. The template, however, brings these together to assist prisons to develop shared and integrated standards of practice to further improve the quality of service delivery for people in prison experiencing emotional distress or mental health problems. 'Shared and integrated' here includes, within prisons, across the prison estate and with key partners such as health boards and social work departments.

For a number of the elements responsibility for ensuring these are in place may lay outwith the prison. In these cases it is suggested that joint protocols may need to be developed locally.

As also noted earlier, this does not mean a 'one size fits all' approach, but is intended to help each prison to develop the steps in ways that reflect the size, function and capacities of each prison. But it also helps to flag up areas where there are gaps in local provision; elements or steps that cannot be provided. This provides a systematic way of identifying these gaps within and across estate so that information can be fed into service planning and development.

Appendix 1 Principles underpinning the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003

1. Non-discrimination – People with mental disorder should, wherever possible, retain the same rights and entitlements as those with other health needs.

2. Equality – All powers under the Act should be exercised without any direct or indirect discrimination on the grounds of physical disability, age, gender, sexual orientation, language, religion or national or ethnic or social origin.

3. Respect for diversity – Service users should receive care, treatment and support in a manner that accords respect for their individual qualities, abilities and diverse backgrounds and properly takes into account their age, gender, sexual orientation, ethnic group and social, cultural and religious background.

4. Reciprocity – Where society imposes an obligation on an individual to comply with a programme of treatment of care, it should impose a parallel obligation on the health and social care authorities to provide safe and appropriate services, including ongoing care following discharge from compulsion.

5. Informal care – Wherever possible, care, treatment and support should be provided to people with mental disorder without the use of compulsory powers.

6. Participation – Service users should be fully involved, so far as they are able to be, in all aspects of their assessment, care, treatment and support. Their past and present wishes should be taken into account. They should be provided with all the information and support necessary to enable them to participate fully. Information should be provided in a way which makes it most likely to be understood.

7. Respect for carers – Those who provide care to service users on an informal basis should receive respect for their role and experience, receive appropriate information and advice, and have their views and needs taken into account.

8. Least restrictive alternative – Service users should be provided with any necessary care, treatment and support both in the least invasive manner and in the least restrictive manner and environment compatible with the delivery of safe and effective care, taking account where appropriate of the safety of others.

9. Benefit – Any intervention under the Act should be likely to produce for the service user a benefit that cannot reasonably be achieved other than by the intervention.

10. Child welfare – The welfare of a child with mental disorder should be paramount in any interventions imposed on the child under the Act.
